Introduction: Today English is one of the most important languages in the world. It is used in education, business, science, technology, and communication between different countries.

Because of this, many schools teach English from primary grades. Young children can learn new languages faster and more naturally than adults, especially pronunciation and simple vocabulary.

Teaching English to primary school students is not always easy. Young learners are usually active and emotional. They cannot focus on one thing for a long time, so teachers should make lessons interesting and enjoyable. If lessons are boring, students may lose interest quickly. For this reason, interactive techniques are very useful in English classes.

Interactive techniques mean activities where students participate actively during the lesson.

These methods help students communicate, play, sing, and work together. Through such activities, children learn English more naturally and without stress. Interactive learning also creates a friendly classroom atmosphere.

One popular interactive method is using games. Games make lessons more exciting and help students remember new words and grammar rules easily. For example, matching games, word puzzles, and role-playing activities improve students' speaking and thinking skills. Songs and chants are also effective because children enjoy music and repetition. They help learners improve pronunciation and listening skills.

Storytelling is another important technique in teaching young learners. Children enjoy listening to stories with pictures and interesting characters. Stories help students understand new vocabulary and improve imagination. Group work and pair activities are also useful because students can practice English with classmates and learn from each other.

Technology is becoming more important in modern education. Teachers can use videos, cartoons, presentations, and educational games to make lessons more interesting. Visual materials help children understand lessons more easily and keep their attention longer.

Interactive techniques also help students become more confident. Children are less afraid of making mistakes when they learn through games and communication. They participate more actively and enjoy the learning process.

However, teachers may face some difficulties such as lack of materials, large classes, or limited time. Even so, interactive methods are still very effective for teaching English in primary schools.

In my opinion, interactive techniques are one of the best ways to teach English to young learners because they make lessons active, enjoyable, and easy to understand.

Conclusion. In conclusion, interactive techniques are very important in teaching English to primary school students. Methods such as games, songs, storytelling, pair work, and technology make lessons more interesting and effective for children. These activities help students improve speaking, listening, vocabulary, and pronunciation skills.

Interactive learning also increases students' motivation and confidence. Children feel comfortable and enjoy participating in classroom activities. Although teachers may have some challenges while preparing interactive lessons, the advantages are much greater. Therefore, teachers should use more interactive techniques in English classes to help young learners study English successfully.

Overall, interactive techniques play a vital role in improving the quality of English language teaching in primary schools. They help children build a strong foundation in English and prepare them for future educational and professional success. Therefore, interactive teaching methods should be widely encouraged and applied in primary school English classrooms.
